PRESS RELEASE

On this day we remember those that have gone before us, giving of themselves to protect and save the lives of others.

Contrary to the plans of the terrorists, 9/11 and the months that followed were days of unity – days of strength and patriotism. Although the details of that day have faded for many, they will never lose their significance with us. We mourn the lost, and remember where we were when the attacks of 9/11 occurred. We also remember and forever honor the first responders who rushed to do their duty that day.

It is the strength of the American character: the ability to emerge from trial with a new and stronger sense of hope and freedom.

Since that day we have trained and educated ourselves to better prepare ourselves and our community for an attack. By our resolve, our commitment to remember, learn and improve, we continue to rise above those who hoped to break us down.

On this day remember the men and women of the police departments, the fire departments and the emergency medical services who accept those same risks to keep us safe today.
